The Golden Rule is: 'treat others and the planet as you would wish to be treated'. In order to treat others better we must first put ourselves in their shoes. This is called empathy - who was the last person you empathised with?

Fashion Revolution Week begins

Fast fashion is when clothes are produced cheaply so that shops on the high street can sell things at very low prices. To keep prices low, workers are often paid badly, and factories often pollute the environment. How can we solve this problem?

Pesach/Passover begins

The Haggadah tells the story of how the ancient Israelites were freed from slavery in Egypt. Jewish people today still gather to remember this key moment in their collective history. What do you know about the history of your family or culture?

Being 'indigenous' means having a close, long-term connection with the land you live on. Many of the people who live in the Amazon are indigenous, as are Native Americans. The world's healthiest ecosystems are often protected by indigenous people. What can we learn from the way they live?

We know it can be hard to find the time to talk about the topics that really matter. Important and current issues like climate change, the energy crisis, peace, and mental wellbeing can feel big and overwhelming but often have only the smallest space allocated to them in the school curriculum.

But we have many moments in the day to develop a sense of connection, compassion, and curiosity. These 'micro moments', although small, can have a big impact. Some good micro moment opportunities are:

- Discussing a question in tutor time
- Setting an intention in an assembly
- Sharing a fun fact whilst coming into the classroom
- Recommending a book, film, or podcast in the playground

These are just some examples of how you could get creative with fostering empathy for other people and the planet, making connections between cultures, discussing positive change and checking in on wellbeing in your school day.

We've developed this classroom calendar to help you create these wonderful moments every day, with global event days that draw attention to specific issues and questions aimed to expand understanding and conversation. Using days like Refugee Week, World Poetry Day, or Earth Day, can be a simple jumping off point to get the conversation rolling.

With easy access to everything you need, use our digital classroom calendar for quick links, resources and full event day guides.
